Senator Hansbrough's Successful Suit for Miss Chapman's Hand.

A Case of Love at Sight-Many Brilliant Accomplishments of the Young Lady.

The wedding of Miss Mary Berri Chapman and Senator Hansbrough, which will occur in New York on August 20, is attracting a great deal of attention. Senator Hansbrough is well known in public life, and the world of literature and art knows Miss Chapman equally well. Besides being a very beautiful woman, she is also very accomplished, and the Senator is to be congratulated in calling one of Washington's choicest blassoms.

Miss Chapman is twenty-eight years old. and every unaffected motion of her graceful figure (clis of culture and refinement. She is of Revolutionary stock, and her parents came from New Haven, Conn. Her musical talent is inherited from her father, who was a gifted musician and a man of unblemished character. At the time of his death, eighteen years ago, Mr. Charles Chapman was an assistant examiner in the Patent Office. His widow was left in reduced circumstances with two children -Robert, a boy eight years old. and May, then ten Years of age. The wife succeeded in obtaining a place in the Patent Office, and still retains that position. The son, Robert H., is connected with the Geological Survey and is stationed in California, but will be present at the wed-

As a colld, Miss Chapman was quaint and ed one with the feeling that she had just stepped out of a story book. This harming romance puts her into it again. Miss Chapman was educated in the District, going first as a pupil in the Franklin School and later on to the McDonald Ellis Academy. She possesses a magnificent clear soprano voice of unusual range and sweeiness, which has been carefully

When nine years old Mary told her first story to a neighbor, who was so impressed with it that she told it in turn to her "Spinning," Mary called it, and as a friend remarked, they were golden sories which she spun.

She is a fine artist, being especially clever in water colors and India inks and is most successful in her darky delineations. She has published one book of poems "Lyrics of Love and Nature," and her genius shows through every line of it.

In many instances Miss Chapman has Illustrated her own work and occasionally sets her dainty little poems to equally dainty original music. She gathered material for some of her poems while she and her mother were the guests of Sepator and Mrs. Jones, in Santa Monica, Cal., five years ago.

The family reside to an unpretentious use on Kingman place northwest and while they are by no means wealthy, everything is dainty and comfortable. Miss Chapman dresses simply but with elegant taste and she is a familiar sight to the residents of the northwest as she strolls out daily, accompanied by her collie dog, Prince. Prince is a buge black dog and Miss Chapman is seldom seen with him. He has gone with her to New York and will also go with the couple on their bridal trip

Miss Chanman is tall and well boilt and proves the good blood which flows in her veins. Her splendidly poised head is crowned with golden brown hair and her eyes are large and deep blue. Her se and mouth are fairly good and she

THE ONE-MAN TRIAL BOARD,

Mr. Pogh Assumes Office as Judge of Charges Against Policemen.

One of the first innovations effected by Commissioner Wight after his appointment was the abilition of the old method of conmg ponce trials Formerly these were always conducted with the most acreey, and all persons not directly connected with the proceed were forbidden to enter the room where the case was being tried. These proceedings have been conducted openly for the past month by a trial board, of which Capt. Austin and two lieutenants were mens Mr. Wight determined, however, that the cases of the policemen could be best relect by one person and invited Mr James Pugh, the assistant attorney for the District, to assume the duties of that position, and sterday the new judge acted in his official capacity for the first time.
